Sample Answer

One of the best pieces of advice I ever received was from my father. This incident took place in the junior year of my college. Just like other people of my age, I was also stuck in the dilemma of figuring out what I would like to do with my life. At that time, my father helped me considerably. Rather than pressurizing his decisions or aspirations on me, he left the decision to me. On top of that, one day, he made me sit down and narrated a story, which was inspired from his own life. My father reminisced about the time when he was out of college and took a job in real estate. Afterward, he ended up doing that job for almost seven years. During this period, he told me that most of the time, he was unhappy. Although he had a well-paying job, a beautiful wife and a happy family, he didn't feel that he was rewarded well. He was making a decent amount of money but he could not find happiness. So, he thought of leaving the job and doing something that interested him. Together, we moved to another state and he started a small restaurant with his friend. Here, though he had to struggle a lot, he was enjoying every bit of it. He came home, at the end of every day, relieved and happy. This story taught me an extremely valuable lesson. I must not jump into something that pays well. I should find something that makes my soul happy. Everything else will follow.

Speaking Part 3

1 Have your parents given you much advice?

Of course! Just like everybody's parents, even mine have given me advice. Their way is quite unusual. They don't give advice to make me feel down. But they do so in the form of stories and their own experiences.

2What kind of advice do parents give their children?

Basically, parents must stand by their childrens' side at every step of their growing stage until they have become mature enough to continue with their lives. Generally, parents give advice on tips to study with concentration, how to ride a bike well, which stream to choose, what job to go with, etc.

3What kind of advice do friends give each other?

Seemingly, friends advise each other about their experiences. For instance, if I have tried a restaurant, I would like to advise my friends to try it. Likewise, others share their experiences of travelling to a city, getting stuck in a situation, and more.

4Do you think young people should follow their parents' advice?

It mainly depends on the situation. While there are some pieces of advice that are nothing less than valuable; there are others that may not match your situation. Thus, it depends on whether that advice is matching the situation. If not, you can ignore the same.
