Speaking Part 2

Describe a person older than you whom you like to spend time with.

You should say:

- who is this person?
- when and where did you both meet?
- why do you like to spend time with him/her?

Sample Answer

I guess I could begin by saying something about who this person is and I think I would have to choose one of my neighbors – Mr. Nam. In fact, he is the one who made big impression on me at the very first moment when we met by his broad horizon of history knowledge and great sense of humor. Going on to my next point, which is when and where we met. Well, Mr. Nam is not the local in my neighborhood, to be more precise, he moved in 3 years ago after retiring at his hometown. When I first bumped into him, I remember asking him the reason for choosing this city and his response really astonished me – that he wanted to learn more about this land's history and culture. From then onward, I have never wanted to stop the desire of learning more about lots of new lands' cultures through his amazing stories. Besides knowledge, he also gives me the experience of seeing things from different angles. Actually, this helps me a whole lot in my work and study at university. In fact Mr. Nam is one of the most admirable people that have ever showed up in my life.

Speaking Part 3

1 Do you think old people's life is better now compared to the past?

Generally speaking, I always consider that nowadays, elderly people's life is way more improved compared to the old days. The reason mainly lies in the fact that today, people are surrounded by lots of convenient equipment that allows them to live more comfortably. In addition, the rapid innovations in medical science also make a great contribution in slowing down aging process and expanding life expectancy. That's why I think the life quality of old people has been upgraded a lot so far.

2 Do you think old people have influence on children?

To some extent I would say yes, elderly people do have some impact on children, especially their behaviors. This is because children tend to imitate what they have seen from older people's daily activities and conversations. Old people also play an important role in educating their children about social knowledge and living experience, especially when these things are not usually taught at school or academic institutions. Therefore, from my point of view, older people do impact on their children's forming probation.

3 What can children learn from old people?

Obviously, there is no doubt to say that elderly people are an enormous resource in terms of living experience and tactics of behaving. Old people indeed have gone through lots of ups and downs in their lives and on that journey, most have constantly accumulated a myriad of experience as well as skills of behaving appropriately. These stuffs are hardly taught in any academic institutions but passed down by our seniors. Hence, children can take a lot of precious lessons from the old people around them.
